

Newspaper Enterprise.

The Evening Piedmont, of Greenville, was one of the enterprising dailies of this state, reaching our desk, that carried a full account of the Jeffries-Johnson fight. In less than 30 minutes after the fight was finished, it was all up in type, printed, carried over the city by newsboys and delivered to the many anxious ones waiting to see and know how the bout went. The Evening Piedmont, as its name implies, is an epitome of the Piedmont section of South Carolina, getting out to its subscribers at a time when they can read, digest, and enjoy the news. When it comes to a "scoop" Rutledge McGhee is right on the job. He has the right newspaper interest. We verily believe that when the maker of good newspaper men finished up his work on Rutledge McGhee, right there and then he quit his job, for he knew he had reached "high water" mark. McGhee and the whole of the Evening Piedmont force are to be congratulated on this progressive piece of newspaper work and the people of Greenville should feel a kindly interest in this journalistic venture. The Piedmont is a good paper; its editorials are same and sensible and its editor, though red-headed, is energetic, pushing, level-headed and well balanced, and, to quote Carpenter, of the Anderson Daily Mail, if he would put a little more (local) news in the paper he would get out a crack-a-jack sheet. Here is hoping that Carpenter's ideal of a newspaper may yet be found in the Evening Piedmont, with J. R. McGhee at its head.

Good Roads Campaign.

The Columbia Record, assisted by the various county papers, started its Good Roads Campaign on the 4th instant, at Newberry. They will tour the state, being at Greenville on Thursday, August 18th and at Pickens the next day, Friday, August 19th and Walhalla, Saturday, August 20th. They started at Newberry on the 4th, and will wind up at Winnsboro on Monday, August 29th.

This movement has for its object the development and building of good roads, and the United States government has loaned its expert, D. H. Winslow to the Record to make practical talks during the campaign.

Mr. C. W. Moorman, formerly Secretary of the Columbia Chamber of Commerce, has charge of the tour, which is being made in automobiles.

Mr. J. Frank Foshee, editor of the Winnsboro News and Herald, says that too much cannot be said about Mr. Winslow as a practical road builder and an enthusiastic speaker. He knows him well.

It is well for our people to study the question of good roads, for it is paramount. On good roads depends the internal development of any section. The government says that on good roads depends the success and keeping on of the rural free delivery system.

Business says on good roads depend the trade of our various sections.

The seeker for a good home asks is there a good road leading by?

Churches cry for good roads as the people say the roads are too bad for me to go to meeting.

The traveller says which is the best way to where I want to go; tell me the best route; put me on the best road.

Last, but not least, the farmer says on account of bad roads I could not get my stuff to market and get the advantage of that last rise in prices.

The wagoner, the pleasure driver, the automobilist, the pedestrian, all clamor for good roads.

It may be that supervisor Looper is bending every energy and doing all he can to give us good roads, but there may be a way he has not yet thought of, that may be pointed out by this meeting. We do not censure the Supervisor, not at all, he has our sympathies, but the time is at hand when there must be a change in road making and in the law governing the same. Therefore, let our people come to this rally and hear this subject discussed, and see if they cannot get light on a dark subject; see if they cannot, from what is said, gain an idea for better roads, and carry these ideas to their Supervisor and on to the legislative members and get permission to "try out" the scheme. It may be a bond issue, a tax on property, or some other feasible plan.

No one will be hurt by attending and all will be given food for thought.

The meeting will be called to order, at 10 a. m., in the court house, Capt. T. J. Mauldin being master of ceremonies.

Mr. Moorman will be the first speaker and in a short, sharp and snappy address will tell of the object of the movement and the success attained so far.

He will be followed by supervisor Looper, who is happiest when addressing a crowd of his constituency and will tell what is being done for the roads in this county and the difficulties he encounters. Mr. Winslow will close with a practical talk.

He has forty-eight subjects which will be published next week. We want each one of our readers to read them over carefully and drop us a postal card giving the subject they would rather hear discussed. From this the subject being called for the most will be the one assigned to him to speak on.

Remember this date in your mind and come.

Hon. George S. Legare on The Stump.

Hon. George S. Legare, who is offering for reelection for the third term in Congress from the Charleston district, and who has been drinking in the health-and life-giving ozone of this God-favored region, left Pickens Monday, accompanied by his father, Judge Legare, for his old home, where he goes to enter the campaign.

We have been intimately connected and thrown with George Legare, off and on, for the past several years, and (we do not say it egotistically,) there is a way newspaper men have of getting next to a fellow that no other class of people can fathom and almost unconsciously, they draw out all there is in him.

We know Mr. Legare to be cool, calm, considerate, level-headed and a "sticker." When he wants anything for his district he studies the situation carefully, lays his plans wisely, and goes after it honestly, boldly and with the belief that he will get it. He is a good "mixer" and "hail-fellow-well-met" with all his colleagues in the house, among both republicans and democrats, and, as a consequence of his sociability, his level-headedness and his ability to "give and take" the tiffs that occasionally arise, he unexpectedly finds help, sympathy, allies and friends all over the house, from various states and in both political parties.

Mainly through him Charleston got her dry dock, and, later, an appropriation to increase its capacity and usefulness.

Mainly by him was the appropriation passed to build the battle-ship "South Carolina," and to him was given the honor of naming her. These few instances show how he stands in Washington.

Recently, when ex-President Roosevelt came home a great fleet of Uncle Sam's ships met him in New York harbor. He, talking to a group of admirers, who had steamed down the bar and boarded ship to be the first to greet him, spread out his hands at the fleet, and cried "D-e-l-i-g-h-t-e-d! These are all mine." One of the party said: "All! I thought one belongs to George Legare; I thought he was given the South Carolina. He asked for it and he generally gets whatever he asks for."

This shows the opinion people outside the state have of him, of his ability and prowess.

We have no interest in the fight in the first district, except for a good man to be elected, but personally, we would like to see Mr. Legare go back to congress, not so much to represent the first district, but because he would be so much help to the state of South Carolina at large and his colleagues in particular.

For that reason, if the voters of the First District can think of no other or a better one, we hope they will return him.

He is an ornament to the old state and the constituency he so ably represents.

Here's hoping he'll win.

The First Day Doesn't Count.

Almost any sort of a suit looks well when it is first put on, but after a man has worn it a little while and his body has begun to move around in it and the effects of the pressing iron have worn away and dampness begins to play havoc with the fabric, unless the shape of the garments have been wrought into cloth and the cloth has been cut so right that it can't help hanging properly, so that the collar must cling to the neck and the lapels lie firmly against the breast, the original appearance of the clothes will soon be lost.

A well made custom tailored suit will be right in the beginning and stay right in the end.

The clothes we sell are specially made for the body as it is and not as it should be and therefore, when it does begin to settle upon him, there isn't a contest between the figure and the garment.
